ECWDB Honors Don Harris for 25 years of service on the Eastern Carolina Workforce Development Board

On Thursday July 10, 2014, at the New Bern Convention Center, ECWDB honored Don Harris for 25 years of service on the Eastern Carolina Workforce Development Board during the WDB / Constorium Meeting.

It was an emotional and commemorative meeting as Mr. Will Collins, Executive Director of NCWORKS presented Harris with the Order of the Long Leaf Pine certificate.

“Since it’s creation in 1963, The Order of the Long Leaf honors persons who have a proven record of service to the State of North Carolina or some other special achievement, and to others as a gesture of friendship and good will. Upon being named to The Order of the Long Leaf Pine, the honoree receives a certificate and the rank of Ambassador Extraordinary, which is the special privilege to propose the North Carolina Toast in select company anywhere in the free world” (longleafpinesociety.org).

Dr. Ron Lingle and Onslow County Commissioner Jack Bright offered their remarks in honor of Harris.

Lingle described Harris as a good friend and role model that set a great example for job development. “He is the face of the best interaction between the industry, community, military, and state machinery for job development that I have ever seen.” said Lingle.

Indeed, Harris’ leadership has set a great example for workforce development. In 2008, the “Don T. Harris Leadership Award” was established in honor of Mr. Harris’ dedication and commitment to the public workforce investment system.

The award continues to recognize outstanding individuals who serve as a volunteer by giving of their time, talent, and expertise, for the cause of improving the quality of lives of others through workforce development.

Carteret County Career Center Manager, Ralph Leeds, expressed his appreciation for Harris’ leadership and dedication, “Don’s leaving was a poignant reminder of how far the board has come through the years.” Leeds said. “And we truly have come a long, long way because, as Don always said; “we have the greatest staff”.

When asked, Don will tell you that his passion for helping others succeed is what contributed to his successful career. “People are the greatest asset of any organization.” said Harris. “It is my opinion that when you help people, you are following the direction that the Lord has laid out for everyone to accomplish.”

Vision

Our vision for the eastern counties of North Carolina is a highly skilled workforce with an educational attainment level that meets the needs of the 21st Century workplace, so that local firms can compete in a technologically advanced global economy.

Mission

Our mission is to ensure that our workforce development system is customer focused, demand-driven and accountable in preparing our current and future workforce to meet the changing needs of a highly-competitive global economy.

Value Added

We add economic value to our communities by ensuring that quality education, job training, and employment opportunities are available for job/training seekers and employers alike, thereby improving the quality of life for our citizens throughout eastern North Carolina.

Key Strategies

- Engage business and community leaders in addressing workforce issues and promote strategies to improve education levels & basic workplace skills.
- Strengthen alliances with economic development to identify and address the workforce needs of current and future industries.
- Implement a community awareness plan that promotes the WDB, NCWORKS Career Centers, and partner services.
- Identify and implement effective employment and training strategies that result in employment opportunities for all citizens.

Directors Corner

Dear Colleagues,

Welcome to all of our new board members and thank you for agreeing to serve as a director on our board! Your expertise in workforce development is critical to the success of our board's mission and we look forward to your leadership!

As you will see on the first page, we honored long-time board member and friend, Mr. Don Harris who recently retired after serving on our board for over 25 years.

Don's stellar leadership, dedication, and commitment to workforce development has helped to guide our board which is recognized as one of the best in the state. Through the years, Don was consistent in sharing his views of how important it is to value your people and invest in them through quality education and job training services. This philosophy is core to the mission of our organization and will continue to guide us as we move into an exciting new program year filled with opportunity.

Program year 2013-2014 was a successful year of transition for our Career Centers and staff with changes in technology and service delivery through NCWORKS; and program year 2014-2015 is starting off even greater with the passing of the Workforce Innovation and Opportunity Act, WIOA.

WIOA will bring many improvements to the workforce development system as it focuses on streamlining programs and improving services for job-seekers and employers. As the plan's implementation phase moves forward, there will be a lot of work on the local, state and federal levels making it an exciting and busy time in workforce development.

To all of our board members, elected officials, partners, career center staff, and WIA service providers, thank you for what you do every single day to make this Region shine!

Sincerely,

Tammy Childers
Executive Director

tools” to give workers better information about career prospects. It also gives cities and states greater flexibility in how they use federal money for training programs.

Mr. Obama, following recommendations presented in a six-month review of the program led by Vice President Joseph R. Biden Jr., also announced a series of executive actions intended to strengthen job training, including a new requirement that federally funded programs disclose how many of their graduates find jobs and what they get paid.

The bipartisan approval of the job-training legislation on July 9 was a rare instance of Democratic and Republican lawmakers coming together to pass legislation during this election year.

Mr. Obama, addressing lawmakers in both parties who pushed for the legislation, said on Tuesday: “Let’s do this more often. It’s so much fun!”

NCWorks “1,000 in 100” Initiative Update

NCWorks

1,000 COMPANIES in 100 COUNTIES in 100 DAYS

Earlier this year, governor Governor Pat McCrory announced a new initiative, called NCWorks. NCWorks focuses on five steps that will connect NC employers to the NC employees with the last step including an initiative to visit 1000 companies in 100 counties in 100 days, called “1000 in 100”.

This statewide listening-and-learning opportunity will:

- Allow service delivery teams to hear as a group, rather than from individual program perspectives, about businesses needs
- Identify ways that North Carolina can better meet those needs so industries can, in turn, hire and retain our state's workers

- Provide the basis for ongoing, collaborative follow-up and service delivery on the local, regional and state levels.

Local teams made up of workforce partners will be visiting 10 companies in each county within 100 days. The information collected from the “1,000 in 100” initiative will be paired with other research to form the basis for possible policy, guideline or structural changes on how North Carolina delivers workforce services in preparation for the 2015 legislative session.

The tentative start date for company visits is mid--September and be will be completed by January 2015.

Craven County Holds First Annual Veterans Stand Down

Despite early morning thunderstorms, about 30 veterans signed in during the first hour of Craven’s first-ever Craven County Veterans Stand Down at Stanley White Recreation Center in New Bern on Tuesday June 10, 2014.

The event was put on by the Veterans Employment Base Camp and Organic Garden and the Craven Career Center.

“The main purpose is to connect with homeless veterans and do outreach,” said Lovay Wallace-Singleton, the executive director of the base camp and organic garden group. “But, it has come to mean so much more. It is a way of veterans’ organizations connecting with civic organizations. It is also a way for certain nonprofit organizations that are assisting veterans to use a one-stop forum in order to service those veterans and find out what the local needs are.”

For some vets like Kenneth Carter of Beaufort, the Stand Down provided hope that the homeless Army vet might find a permanent place to live.

“I’m looking for information on benefits,” said Carter. “Right now, I’m homeless,” he said, adding that he stays “here and there and with friends and such.”

Through the Veterans Stand

Down, Carter was able to talk with representatives from of the Greenville Office of Veterans Administration Homeless Vets program.

Lindsey Arledge, supervisor of the homeless program for the Durham VA, said that the agency verifies that a vet is homeless and then looks for ways to assist through various program referrals.

She said they would look at the resources available in the vet’s area such as shelters and then possible permanent housing.

She said one program included housing vouchers in the Greenville area.

Many of the veterans who made their way around the various sites were like Jeff Padrick of Grantsboro. He is an Army vet from the early to mid-1980s who is employed, but looking for possibilities about veterans’ benefits.

Padrick has had his share of bad luck, working 11 years at Hatteras Yachts before being laid off. He lived on unemployment, went back to school and got a degree and now works on airplanes for Tradewinds Aviation in New Bern.

“I’m not homeless or anything, I just wanted to find out what is available,” he said of potential veterans’ benefits. He added that this venue afforded him an opportunity to find out answers to some of his questions.

Organizations such as the the Family Endeavors group from Jacksonville, a supportive services program for veteran families, provide a variety of services for veterans. Their offerings include case management, help in obtaining VA benefits, emergency financial assistance and aid with reaching other public benefits.

Some of the groups on hand, housed under tents included the Craven Veterans Council; DAV Chapter 40 of Craven County; local American Legion and VFW posts; a black veterans group; Vietnam Veterans of America; the Division of Workforce Solutions; the Military Officers Association; and Military Missions in Action. The Military Missions group out of Fuquay-Varina is currently building a Heroes Home in Pamlico County for a disabled veteran and his family.

Also on hand was Richard Hansen, the disabled veteran outreach program specialist with the Craven Career Center, along with veteran employment supervisor Reeshema Walker.

Third-grade Reading Linked to College and Career Readiness

A recent analysis by MetaMetrics®, indicates the reading level of North Carolina third-graders is highly predictive of their readiness for college and careers after high school graduation. The data, taken from the Public School Forum's 2013 "Roadmap of Need," covers a broad range of socioeconomic, educational, and health and wellness metrics for all 100 counties in the state. MetaMetrics' analysis found a high correlation between many of the Roadmap metrics and ACT performance (as a proxy for college and career readiness).

The analysis also found significant gaps in reading performance among many NC counties. In roughly half of North Carolina's school districts, 32 percent or more of third-graders are not reading at grade level. The performance gap found across the state ranges from 12 percent of third-graders in Camden County who are not reading on grade level to 54 percent in Washington County. "That means that over half of third-graders in Washington County will struggle with understanding a well-known children's book like Charlotte's Web, compared to only just over 10 percent in Camden County who will struggle with the same book," says Malbert Smith III, Ph.D., president and co-founder of MetaMetrics.

Smith believes earlier intervention can help decrease the performance gap.

While a great deal of attention has been given to required attendance at summer reading camps and potential retention for students who are struggling to read on grade level, less attention has been given to the early and periodic assessments that allow teachers and parents to intervene early when a student is struggling to read.

"By extending assessment tools to the start of kindergarten, we do not have to wait until the end of third grade to identify reading difficulties and intervene appropriately," Smith says.

According to MetaMetrics, putting students on the path to college and career readiness will be best served by four interventions: early pre-kindergarten education, addressing summer learning loss, the smart use of digital personalized learning platforms, and implementing the Common Core State Standards.

"We need to invest in public education and in early childhood education," says the Forum's president and executive director, Keith Poston. "And we must continue to examine strategies to combat the gap between low-wealth and high-wealth counties."

The full MetaMetrics report can be accessed at www.lexile.com/about-lexile/white-papers.

Governor McCrory Signs Legislation to Help Active Duty Members and Veterans

Active duty members, veterans and military spouses can have selected military training and past experience converted into college credit and/or professional licenses in North Carolina under legislation signed into law on July 10, 2014 by Governor Pat McCrory.

"Service members and veterans receive some of the best training in the world. This law gives them the opportunity to turn that training and experience into certifications and college credits that will help them get good-paying jobs in the civilian world," said Governor McCrory, who signed the bill into law at the Joint Force Headquarters in Raleigh.

"This law will also provide North Carolina employers with well-disciplined and high-skilled workers who know a thing or two about how to get a job done and done well."

SB 761, which received strong bipartisan support and not one "no" vote in either the House or the Senate, instructs the University of North Carolina and North Carolina Community College systems to develop programs that will convert military training into college credits and the state's licensure boards into professional certifications and licenses. Already, a few programs have been developed to convert military training.

They include:

- Commercial Driver's License for truck drivers
- Information Technology Specialists' Certification
- ASE Certification for Vehicle Mechanics

Conversion programs for military trained law enforcement officers and paramedics are expected to be announced soon.

This new law also instructs the UNC and NC Community College systems as well as the state's licensure boards to work with the military to develop programs to fill any knowledge or skills gaps between military occupational training and civilian license requirements. The law applies to active military, military spouses and veterans.

"This bill is a win-win," said Senator Ron Rabin. "It enriches our workforce, which attracts businesses to come into the state, while also helping the economy. Conservatives in the General Assembly have been trying to make the economy better in the state, and this bill aims to do just that. It also helps military personnel by creating an environment of appreciation. This is a military-friendly and economy-oriented bill."

WIA helps Start a Career in Biotechnology

Sherry Garner spent 30 years as working in a local physicians office and love her job.

Although she attained

Bachelors of Science in Medical Technology at East Carolina University, Garner was left with little options in her field when the last physician retired.

“The Workforce Investment Act (WIA) stepped in to see if anybody wanted to be retrained and said they would pay our tuition. They thought the BioTech industry would be a good fit (for me),” said Garner.

Officials with the WIA covered Garner’s tuition at Lenoir Community College and at Pitt Community College where the non-traditional student started taking her first classes in Biotechnology.

“I switched over to Pitt and that’s when I got a glimpse of what I was really getting into. It was different than what I was used to, but I found it an easier transition because I was familiar with the equipment and terminology,” said Garner.

Garner came to enjoy the Life Sciences and Microbiology but says a new internship at Metrics, Greenville pharmaceutical company, has also peaked her interest in the chemistry side of Biotechnology.

Garner took a tough situation and turned it into a new passion through her classes at Pitt Community College.

“I guess it has almost a futuristic feel to it and that excites me, that I’m going into something that before you could only dream of and, all of sudden, it’s reality now,” said Garner.

WIA Success Story– Santana

Santana was a single mom with an unemployment check as her only source of income. She decided it was time for a change and a new career field.

She was referred to the WIA Program at Greene County Career Center where staff helped her enroll in the Medical Office Program at Lenoir Community College.

Through hardwork and dedication, Santana balanced raising a child while also maintaining above a 3.5 GPA.

On May 13, 2014, she graduated with honors from Lenoir Community College and earned her Associate in Applied Science Degree in Medical Office Administration.

Santana is employed full time as a medical secretary for the Internal Medicine Office at Kinston Medical Specialists.

WIA Success Story– Linda Loftin

Twenty-five years after graduating from high school, Linda Loftin decided to take a couple of classes at Lenoir Community College in 2010. The following year, she decided to attend college full time and obtain an Associate’s degree in Business Administration.

During her her studies, Loftin’s personal life became more difficult and she contemplated quitting school. With the encouragement of her WIA counselor, Mary Richardson, Loftin pushed through and continued taking courses. “Mrs. Richardson said to me, ‘Linda, if you only can take one or two classes a semester just do that until you can take more. Stick with it, but just don’t quit.’ It was hard to take her advice, but I did,” said Loftin.

Loftin completed her degree in May 2014.

“My time at LCC has taught me one thing, besides it has the best business instructors in North Carolina, and that is endurance and persistence pays off.”

Onslow County Career Center Staff Member Makes A Difference Volunteering

culture during her tours in Iwakuni and Okinawa, Japan. She was also hand-selected to serve as an enlisted career counselor at Headquarters Marine Corps for the Manpower Management Enlisted Assignments. The position allowed her to travel to numerous countries providing career advice.

“We traveled to various parts of the globe and briefed Marines, as well as provided individual counseling,” said Horn. “You never realize how much you made a difference until years later when you meet them again and see.”

For Gail Horn, dedication to our local communities goes far beyond working at the Onslow County Career Center. Through her many volunteer activities Gail continues to serve and provide support to the Jacksonville community.

Horn, a retired Master Gunnery Sergeant with 25 years of service, is an unsung heroine for her efforts with organizations like the Women Marines Association, Disabled American Veterans Chapter 16, Marine Corps League and the American Legion.

(Horn) is well known in the community and works tirelessly assisting veterans in need,” said Fernando Schiefelbein, operations specialist for Marine Corps Installations East.

Her experience providing career advice is reflected in some of the highlights of her military career.

While serving in the Marine Corps, Horn experienced the Japanese

Currently, Horn is an active member for numerous organizations and is the secretary for the Women Marines Association, the post service officer for the Veterans of Foreign Wars post 9133 and has volunteered with the Relay for Life and the Museum of the Marine. In addition, Horn found her passion when she received the position as a Veteran Employment Representative.

“I realized I had found my calling and have developed great relationships with many of the businesses and veterans in this community,” said Horn. “(I enjoy) assisting my fellow man in improving their quality of life.”

Horn recommends for Marines getting ready to retire, to follow their passion and find a job they will love. “Don’t just look for a job, make a plan and look for a career,” said Horn.

“Still Serving” presents a monthly piece about those veterans who continue to make an impact in our community.

After retiring from the Marine Corps in 2009, Horn made the decision to remain in the Jacksonville area so her daughter could finish school there.

“It was important to me to allow her to finish school there, and the school’s newscast was enabling her to find her (passion in) photojournalism,” said Horn. “It also gave me an opportunity to finish my bachelor’s degree at Campbell University aboard Marine Corps Base Camp Lejeune.”

Horn received the push she needed from community members Stephen Smith and the late Randy Reichler to get involved within the Jacksonville community.

“The way they supported individuals and freely gave of their knowledge and time was inspiring,” said Horn. “As such, I felt an obligation to pay it forward and became active in several veteran organizations.”
